Redoubled efforts imperative

Greater actions needed to avoid the risks and intensifying impacts of global heating and ecological destruction

The intensifying impacts of the climate crisis and its twin nature and human crises have brought the world to a turning point. The 27th session of the Conference of the Parties (COP 27) to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) broke new ground for the first time in decades. The leaders of nearly 200 countries agreed to an ambitious and comprehensive action plan to help develop countries cope with the impacts of climate change. This is a significant breakthrough.

Global heating has reached unprecedented levels. In 2021, more than 190 countries agreed to limit global temperature rise to 1.5°C, highlighting the importance of taking strong actions to address the climate crisis.

The Conference of the Parties to the UNFCCC is an important international forum for discussing strategies to address climate change and other environmental issues. At the COP 27, countries discussed ways to strengthen the Paris Agreement and foster greater international cooperation to achieve the goal of limiting global temperature rise to 1.5°C.

China is committed to achieving the goal of net-zero emissions by 2060, and it has a strong record of successful efforts to mitigate climate change. The country’s success in lifting some 800 million people out of poverty, and its rapid economic growth, have contributed significantly to the global fight against climate change.

The COP 27 offered an important opportunity for countries to strengthen their commitments to the Paris Agreement and work together to address the climate crisis. The conference also discussed ways to support developing countries in their efforts to adapt to the impacts of climate change and achieve sustainable development.

China is an active participant in the global climate change negotiations, and it has played a key role in promoting the development and implementation of the Paris Agreement. In addition, China has been a leader in promoting the development and implementation of the UNFCCC, and it has a strong record of successful efforts to mitigate climate change.
